

Giving Credit Where It's Due

Although every effort was made to ensure accurate identification of the artwork in this book, it was inevitable that new information would emerge. After the book went to press, conclusive evidence surfaced identifying a number of layout drawings as being done by Lee Mishkin, rather than Dick Ung as listed in the captions. Mishkin should also be listed in the production credits under Production Design, the term used on this production for layout. Lee was responsible for the sequence featuring the visit by the Ghost of Christmas Past in Scrooge's bedroom through the song, "Alone in the World." His work is depicted here.
